

Campus Engagement Reflection: Wellness Activity

1. What did you do?

I went to the Herbert Wellness Center several times throughout my first two weeks. I have done weight lifting there.

2. Was this your first time engaging with this group/resource on campus?

No, I have been to the Herbert Wellness Center before the first meeting last Monday.

3. Was the experience positive or negative? Explain why.

Positive because the gym was nice and had good machines. It was a bit packed though.

4. What were your overall feelings and impressions?

I liked it, but I just thought it was a little crowded. There were a lot of racquetball courts too, which reminded me of the LA Fitness gym I go to.

5. How would you describe the culture of that group/organization? Do you feel like it's a fit for you? If not, what's another organization you might consider next?

I think it's a great fit because I saw lots of hard-working people there.

6. Do you think this group/activity/experience appeals to students of many diverse identities, or is it more appealing to students who have a particular identity (gender, race, religion, etc.)? If you think it appeals to a particular identity or identities, which ones and why?

I think going to the gym appeals to students who have some spare time on their hands and want to stay fit and healthy.

7. Did you feel welcome in this space? If so, what made you feel welcome? If not, what could the group have done to make you feel more welcome? How can you take what you learned from this experience to ensure that you create a welcoming space for others?

Of course I feel welcome. I love UM so far and the gym is also a great place. I can politely ask how many sets somebody has and always take out my AirPods when somebody is asking me something there. But I also do this at every gym I go to, so I will also do it for the Herbert Wellness Center.
