

Growing Backwards

I've outgrown my hands and feet
Now blood rests in the pores of my fingers
Nails sharpening, reality twisted
Breaking my spine to leave my home
Bones crack and
The fragment of a memory rests between my ribs
It dares to last; it dares to last

Home is neither blood nor brick
It's a field at night dancing with the dreams you dare to have
Knocking on your door
It's you

I've outgrown my hands and feet
And my brain has caved in on itself
Echoes bounce around the walls
Cobwebs litter the room, and when she screams, you'll say
The lights are on but no one's home

"Hell is coming back"
No
No, not again
Slipping under
Coming back
What year is it again?

Angels would not last in this place
How dare you preach about morality here

This story is older than you and me
So come here ghosts,
"Come back", I'll say,
And tell me, "did you do it?"