

Love?

I love the way you walk—no—stroll down the hallway.

I love how I can't deal with this anymore and it's only a Monday.

I love the way your eyes never wander to meet mine and how mine never wander from yours.

They'll stay with you unwaveringly until you disappear through those doors.

I love the way your hair falls perfectly over your eyes and the way I notice it every time.

I love the way thinking about you almost feels like a crime.

I love the way I want to talk about us but I'll never cross that line.

I love it when you rip out my heart and throw it right aside.

I'd fall to my knees and beg but the only thing I have left is my pride.

I love it when you talk to her (it makes me want to die).

I love it when you strike me back and smile when I cry.

I love the way that love and hate exist on a fragile line.

But I hate the way that love and hate can exist at the same time.