

“One Single Request.”

In spring,
Grandma’s flowers blossomed.
Adorned and fragrant,
Awakened nature,
Attracted bees,
Fluttered butterflies.
Life is a vibrant chance.

A cycle, a year passed,
Petals wither and fall.

Another spring,
Grandma’s flowers blossomed.
Blooming and luminous,
Called for kids in hives,
Laughter,
Playfulness,
Freely thrives.

A year passed,
Blossoms fade; nature’s cast.

Another spring,
Grandma’s flowers blossomed.
Delightful and delicate,
Greeted a pair of couples,
A flower in hair,
Each other in hand.

Again, a year elapsed,
Flowers decent, time clasped.

Another spring,
Grandma’s flowers blossomed.
Elegant and fragile,
Said to everyone,
Mom and Dad and the cousins I did not know.
Flowers grew around the hard gray stone,
In wipes in howls,
Life’s stories retold.

Once again,
Years passed; flowers wilted and died.

Grandma’s flowers,
You have seen so much,
Bearer of tales and keeper of hours.
I just have one single request,
Next spring,
Blossom again,
For the nature,
For the bees’ hum,
For the butterfly’s charm,
For the little children’s glee,
For the couple’s blessing,
For everyone that came to visit you,
For Grandma.
